1. INTRODUCTION

Football is for everyone, and that has never been truer when it comes to the women’s game and its growth and development, whether at grassroots level or right at the top of the international stage.

This report will serve as a benchmarking tool for FIFA and its stakeholders to help put their collaborative and strategic plans into action. To do this, the report has been divided into three sections:

- Global snapshot – an overview of how the results feed into the five pillars of the FIFA Women’s Football Strategy. These pillars represent the development and growth of the game, how it is being showcased, communicated and commercialised, governed and led, and how education and empowerment are being utilised.
- Confederations fact sheet – a breakdown of the results relating to everything from the participation of players to the number of coaches and referees on a much wider, confederation scale.
- Member associations fact sheet – highlighting the current status quo of the 198 member associations that participated in the survey.

The significance of this survey report is further heightened thanks to ITMS (International Transfer Matching System) being utilised for the very first time in the women’s game. The online platform was developed to provide transparency in football transfers to member associations, and has recorded that 996 transfers took place between 1 January 2018 and 1 May 2019.

Much like the FIFA Women’s Football Strategy, this survey report is designed to empower our member associations and the six confederations to take steps to build on the women’s football landscape in their country and to ensure progress is tracked for when the next report is published.

Encouragingly, 76% of participants have developed a comprehensive women’s football strategy, which will go some way to improving those numbers. It is important to note, however, that while FIFA has identified key indicators of development to measure progress, one must consider the differing local contexts external to football, such as the local socio-economic environment. This is why we have included the World Economic Forum’s global Gender Gap report score as additional context to be considered when interpreting each of the member associations’ fact sheets.

Women’s football continues to grow rapidly, but there is still a lot of work to be done to ensure all our member associations are fulfilling the true potential of the sport. We therefore need to encourage participation, seek out new commercial opportunities, and most importantly, provide avenues for young girls and women to pull on a pair of boots, and enjoy the game we love.
