FIFA, working in conjunction with the Dutch Association, KNVB, is pleased to start a new chapter in the history of FIFA competitions. In order to fulfil a need in the international football game, FIFA joined forces with the KNVB to organise the first time ever a World Championship for Five-a-Side Football. On behalf of the Fédération Internationale de Football Association I would like to thank the KNVB sincerely for its exceedingly professional collaboration.

Dr João Havelange
FIFA President
A New Setting for Football

The whistle for the start of the first FIFA World Championship for Five-a-side Football denoted that for the first time in the long history of our organisation, we had left the traditional turf usually associated with football. Not only had the surface changed; the goals and ball had too. This is a remarkable step for a federation whose characteristics have always included a deep sense of tradition and continuity.

Neither was there a dearth of harbingers of gloom expressing scepticism about the new variation of our sport. The future development of five-a-side football (on which the principles of indoor football are based) is indeed difficult to assess and we still have a long way to go before a definitive version of the Laws of the Game has evolved. Amendments, improvements and appraisals of our initial experience with the game will certainly follow bearing in mind that these first attempts have been modest but nonetheless successful.

It is appropriate and useful to recall a few basic principles of five-a-side football. The most significant is first of all that: five-a-side or indoor football is not intended to compete with the traditional form of our sport. The championship in Holland was not planned with the stars of the green turf in mind but for the fans and experts of five-a-side football. There are hundreds of thousands of footballers who follow only the smaller version of our sport. Why should they be denied the allure of proving themselves at international level? Indoor football provides the traditional footballer with the opportunity of improving his own game. Technique, mental alertness and physical agility - characteristics of five-a-side football - are qualities also befitting the turf player and are never developed to the full. What is more, indoor football is not affected by the weather and requires fewer players.

Indoor football is an important component in the promotion of up-and-coming players. Playing football in the street - a recreation that provided previous generations of children with hundreds of hours of precious training - has long disappeared, particularly in industrial countries. Instead, sports gymnasia have sprung up everywhere in modern housing estates and most of the time they lie idle. It should be one of the duties of football to lead the youth of today back into these gymnasia. Now, with the Laws for Five-a-side Football and the fact that it takes only five players to form a team, the conditions are there to enable future generations to pursue our sport outside the realm of organised football in clubs.

Finally, yet another point: many Associations flirt with the idea of arranging a FIFA tournament but cannot because the prerequisites are missing. For a five-a-side world championship it takes only four gymnasias - that is the minimum requirement.

The Championship in Holland has found a worthy place in the ranks of world competitions organised by FIFA and that our sport has been enriched by a new, hitherto little known but very exciting feature.

Joseph S. Blatter
General Secretary
The World Championship for Five-a-Side Football, which had five big cities in the Netherlands under its spell from 5-15 January, was a double party for the KNVB. Not only were we pleased with the assignment of the first World Championship of this kind to the Netherlands, but also with the fact that the Royal Dutch Football Association could not have wished for a better opening to celebrate its Centennial.

Sixteen countries from all parts of the world were our guests during the World Championship. The KNVB did everything to offer all these people an enjoyable and successful stay in the Netherlands. It was enjoyable to see so many interested spectators and their behaviour supporting their team enthusiastically but also keeping an eye open for the performances of the other participants. This was the very way to make this World Championship a festival of football for all those involved.

M.W.J. Kastermans

Emergence of Five-a-Side Football in the Netherlands

Five-a-side football is a fast-rising sport in the Netherlands. Interest in this sport began to grow in the sixties. The KNVB initially did not take part in its development, but popular interest in this sport, particularly in the provinces of Noord-Holland and Noord-Brabant, led it to change its attitude.

With a membership of 150,000, five-a-side has since become a mature form of football. The competition is divided into six national leagues. Current plans envision two main leagues by 1990. There are currently about 800 sports halls where five-a-side is played. More than 3,300 clubs participate with at least one team. Five-a-side football is played by men and women, boys and girls. In Holland, at least 100,000 five-a-side football players have not yet joined the KNVB. The Association Headquarters are currently engaged in a vigorous campaign to bring all these players together under the KNVB flag. The interest of the public and the media in five-a-side football continues to grow.

The KNVB considered the organisation of this championship a great opportunity for promoting this new form of football. We are proud to report that this aim was realised.

Holland as a Pioneer

Five-a-Side Football is Holland's biggest indoor sport. Every week, more than 250,000 boys, girls, men and women enjoy playing it. 150,000 youngsters play five-a-side football under the aegis of the Koninklijke Nederlandsche Voetbalbond (KNVB) which - unlike many foreign football associations - has adopted as diverse a range of football associated activities as possible. In addition to regular field football, it organises youth football, football for the disabled, women's football and five-aside football.

I daresay that five-a-side football has reached a high level of accomplishment in the Netherlands. Some years ago this observation gave rise to the desire to pit our teams against those of other countries. Successes achieved in Hungary, Spain and Brazil have confirmed that we are on the right track.

In view of the experience and tradition of the KNVB, we were able to organise the first official World Championship. We have been supported in this by the Dutch Government, which also feels that a prestigious event like a World Championship is certain to contribute to a further increase in the number of people playing five-a-side football.

Chairman of the KNVB

Victory smiles — flowers and gold medals for Brazil.

Raul, the captain, scored the winning goal in the 2-1 victory over Holland.

Pablo Porta Bussoms (Spain), the Chairman of the Committee for Five-a-side Football, awarding the silver medals to the runners-up, Holland.

Technique and dynamism — a scene from the semi-final between Brazil and Belgium.
Fighting spirit combined with willpower (Paul Vermes pictured above breaking through Italian opposition) and fair play characterised the USA team in Holland. They certainly earned coming third and being awarded the Fair Play Trophy.

Vic Hermans had triumphed over the USA in the semi-final but had to concede victory to Brazil in the final. Receiving the Golden Ball Trophy from João Havelange in recognition of his performance as the best player in the tournament may well have dispelled some of his disappointment.

5-a-side football

5-15 January 1989, the Netherlands

1st FIFA world championship for five-a-side football (zaalvoetbal)
IN A WORTHY MANNER

Five-a-side football is Holland's biggest indoor sport. Over 250,000 boys, girls, men and women derive pleasure from it every week. 150,000 young people play five-a-side football under the umbrella of the Dutch football association, the KNVB, which - in contrast to a number of football organizations in other countries - has adopted as much as possible of what is taking place in the world of football. Not only field football, but also youth football, football for the handicapped, women's football and five-a-side football.

The KNVB is therefore extremely pleased to have the honour of organizing the 1st FIFA World Championship for Five-A-Side Football, to be held in Holland in January 1989.

In view of the experience and traditions of the KNVB, we consider that we are capable of organizing this first official world championship in a worthy manner. We believe that the impact of such a prestigious tournament as a world championship can contribute to a further increase in the number of people who play five-a-side football.

1989 is also an important year for the KNVB in another respect. It will then be a hundred years since the football association came into being.

Organizing the 1st FIFA World Championship for Five-A-Side Football means that this centenary year will get off to a very special start.

J.W. van Marle
Chairman, KNVB
Football has been played in Holland for over hundred years. A little over a century ago, Haarlem-born Pim Mulier returned enthusiastically from a visit to England. His enthusiasm led to the formation, on 15 September 1879, of the first soccer club in Holland: HFC, which was later to receive the predicate Royal, and which is still in existence. On 8 December 1889 the Koninklijke Nederlandse Voetbalbond was formed, with Mulier its first chairman. As in most countries, football soon surpassed all other sports in popularity. In 1954, professional football was introduced in Holland.

Clubs like Ajax, Feyenoord and PSV and players like Johan Cruyff, Ruud Krol, Johan Neeskens, Marco van Basten and Ruud Gullit gave Dutch football an excellent reputation throughout the world. In 1974 and 1978, the Dutch national team came second in the world championship tournament. Football continues to be a popular sport in Holland.

The KNVB has a membership of about one million. With a population of fourteen million, this means that over 7% of the Dutch play football...

30,000 matches are played in Holland each week. There are more than 6,500 clubs, 37 of which play professional football.

Through the years, Holland has played an important part in the development of the international football organization. The KNVB is one of the founders of FIFA.
FIVE-A-SIDE FOOTBALL IN HOLLAND

Five-a-side football is a fast-rising sport in Holland.
Interest in this sport began to grow in the sixties.
The KNVB initially did not take part in its development, but people's great interest in this sport, particularly in the provinces of Noord-Holland and Noord-Brabant, changed its attitude.
With a membership of 150,000, five-a-side has since become a mature form of football. The competition is divided into six national leagues.
Current plans envision two main leagues by 1990.
There are currently about 800 sports halls where five-a-side is played. More than 3,300 clubs participate with at least one team. Five-a-side football is played by men and women, boys and girls. In Holland, at least 100,000 five-a-side football players have not yet joined the KNVB. Association Headquarters is currently engaged in a vigorous campaign to bring all these players together under the KNVB flag.
The interest of the public and the media in five-a-side football continues to grow. Naturally, the Koninklijke Nederlandsche Voetbalbond considers the organization of the Five-a-side Football World Championship a great opportunity for promoting this new form of football.
